disease at Streveport have unanimously reported that the fever was brought from Mexico to Shreveport by a circus company, distributing the poison on its track through fexes. As to its origin in Memphi, its pain is so plain and patent that all can trace it. The towboat Bee came from Shreveport to this port; the captain (Culls) died when a few miles above Memphis; his body was brought back. One of the crew of the boat came ashore with fever, and asked the privilege of catering the house of a kind-hearted old frishman named Riley. Riley, true to the instincts of his race, sver roady to protect and defend the weak, to aid the needy or succort he sick, invited him to enter his abode. The sailor lived but a few hours.
